

NURSE POLITICIAN

Abstract

Nurse as a politician is considered as important role in nursing profession because it help the nurse to intersect other profession, help to identify the problem faced by doctors and students in clinical and teaching profession. Policy advocacy, health promotion, representation, bridge building, public health advocacy. Nurse as a politician also faced challenges during their process towards positive changes while intersecting medical and political issues.

Keywords: Nurse, politician, Policy advocacy, health promotion, representation, bridge building, public health advocacy.

Authors

Mr. Ravikant Sharma

Medical Surgical Nursing (CVTS)
College Of Nursing
Autonomous State Medical College
Firozabad, Uttarpradesh, India

Ms. Astha

B.Sc. Nursing (Pursuing)
Tirupati College Of Nursing
Pacific Medical University
Udaipur, Rajasthan, India.

I. INTRODUCTION

Health care and management for healthy communities. In today's dynamic health and politics environment, the nurse statesman emerges as a unique and powerful figure.

Nurses play an important role in healthcare and are often overlooked in medical facilities and emergency responders. It accounts for half of all doctors and plays an important role in healthcare.

Many nurses see the importance of policy development to improve patient health through patient management or nursing education. With the dual role of medical knowledge and political knowledge, the Nurse is ready to play an important role in the development of health policy and advocate for the health of the health care provider and the public.

II. THE IMPORTANCE OF NURSE POLITICIAN

1. Nurses at the intersection of health care and management have unique skills that allow them to advocate for health reform.
2. They exist to meet the needs of professionals who can bridge the gap between complex medical treatment and complex policy development.
3. Nurse Statesmen have a strong understanding of the problems faced by doctors and patients and are uniquely positioned to create solutions that benefit all stakeholders.

III. ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF NURSE POLITICIAN

1. Nurses use their doctorates to shape health policy and play an important role in politics.
2. They understand the problems faced by patients and doctors and work to improve access to healthcare, address inequalities and advocate for people's needs.
3. These individuals are responsible for advocating health care policies, including equal access to health care, improved employment opportunities for treatment professionals, and improved standards of patient care.
4. Nurses also work in the world of medicine and politics. Their ability to transform complex medical concepts into easy-to-understand recommendations enables effective communication between healthcare professionals and policy makers.
5. Links are important to ensure that political action in medical reality is effective, efficient and effective.

Their responsibilities include:

- Policy advocacy
- Health promotion
- Representation
- Bridge building
- Public Health Advocacy

1. Policy Advocacy: Nurses use their knowledge and experience to advocate for policies that care for patients, improve health hygiene, and provide support for medical staff.

- 2. Healthcare: These people advocate for health care reform and policies that promote better patient care, improve the quality of doctors' work, and promote equality of treatment.
- 3. Representation: Nurses represent the interests of doctors and patients, using their first-hand knowledge to influence policy decisions that shape the health system, local, regional and national health.
- 4. Bridging: By serving as a link between doctors and politics, they provide good communication and cooperation between the two fields.
- 5. Public Health Advocacy: Nurses often focus on public health issues such as disease prevention, health education, and healthy drinking in the community, and use their skills to create positive health outcomes for their representatives.

IV. CONTRIBUTIONS TO PUBLIC HEALTH ADVOCACY

1. Nurses often direct their efforts to promoting public health, focusing on leadership and understanding health decision making in terms of disease prevention, health education, and public health. These individuals are more than willing to support initiatives that address the root causes of conflict.
2. The ability to develop policies that prioritize preventive health care can lead to significant improvements in public health outcomes.
3. Nurses can use their medical expertise to advocate for evidence-based approaches to public health. Whether it's a global pandemic or a health emergency, their unique perspectives allow them to advocate for interventions with best practices and knowledge research.

V. CHALLENGES FACED BY NURSE POLITICIANS

1. Despite their ability to create positive change, nurses face many challenges arising from the intersection of medical and political issues.
2. Addressing these issues requires a balance between defending health interests and addressing the complex web of politics.
3. Nurses may also face opposition from traditional politicians who do not understand the complexity of healthcare.
4. Convincing other policy makers of the importance of health advice will require excellent communication skills and the ability to tell people's stories behind the scenes.

VI. CONTRIBUTIONS TO HEALTH POLICY AND MANAGEMENT

1. Nursing status's contributions to health policy and management are designed to be effective, effective and beneficial.
2. Their unique strengths allow them to identify gaps in healthcare, propose solutions to problems before the jaws, and advocate for policies that matter to patients and professionals.
3. Their views on policy are supported by interviews with patients, their families and colleagues in the clinic.

4. Nurse Statesmen also contribute to the health culture in the community through health education programs that encourage people to be members of their own health, lead a healthy lifestyle and reduce burdens.
5. Nurse-practitioners abandon the longstanding rule of law by promoting a community that values health and protection.

VII. CONCLUSION

The emergence of the Government Nurse is a major shift at the intersection of medicine and politics. With dual expertise in nursing and management, they manage the complexities of policy development and health reform advocacy. Their roles as advocates, bridge builders and health advocates make them an important influence in building a healthy society.

Despite the challenges nurses may face, they remain committed to promoting positive change and reducing healthcare shortages.

As the world continues to grapple with complex health challenges, the role of the nursing state will become increasingly important and advance the future of medical policy and management for the benefit of all.

REFERENCE

- [1] Manson J. Diane, Leavitt K. Judith (1998). Policy & Politics in Nursing & Health Care. 3rd Edition. Philadelphia: W. B. Saunders Company, Pp 9 – 14.
- [2] Chitty Kittrel Kay (1997). Professional Nursing – Concept & Challenge. 2nd Edition. Philadelphia: W. B. Saunders Company, Pp 454 – 460.
- [3] Jardin Karen E. (2001). Political Involvement in Nursing-Education & Empowerment – Home Study Program Cover Story. AORN Journal, October.